About the piece

Migrations is the setting of three of my poems for Bass-Baritone with Pierrot Ensemble plus Percussion. These three poems follow my own migration to the US, but also refer to the plight of all refugees, which, as the son of holocaust-fleeing immigrants I can relate to.

The first poem Exodus describes the lapping waves of Australia's Sydney Harbour where I grew up. Its text combines themes of my own experiences not only with those of my grandparents', but also with the oppressed Aboriginal people who were massacred and exiled from Sydney Harbour. The poem uses the harbour itself as a metaphor for the body of suppression with which we deny the ever-present horrors of modern civilization.

The second movement Transit conveys the hostile industrial 'concrete jungle' of Brooklyn, New York, a place where I witnessed and experienced much personal turmoil and transformation. Transit pairs my own first nightmarish taste of emotional collapse with the struggle and environmental oppression faced by the thousands of toughened migrant families I witnessed on the streets every day.

The final movement, Homecoming is a simple song about finding both one's home, in both the physical and metaphysical senses, and in my case inspired by the serene oak-lined streets of Austin where I reside with my wife and two children. Its ghostly middle section harks back to the turmoil of the previous two movements, but now incorporates such negative experience into a more stable and positive force - the theme of transcendence through the motion of survival. This quiet moment reveals the deepest fruit of the Migrations, a humble, yet hard-won spirituality, the coming of appreciation of home life.

Migrations was first performed in concert in Jessen Hall, February 2nd, 2017 by

Tim O'Brien - baritone voice
Bryan Kennard - flute
Nick Brown - clarinet
Sara Sasaki - violin
Matt Armbruster - 'cello
Linda Angkasa - piano
Kendall Floyd - percussion conducted by Jason Missal

Texts: i. Exodus

Into the harbour comes morning -
Over the water comes dawn's breath,
Dawn's star.

Inward the breakers are roaring -
The swell of the tide bringing Sea-foam, plastic and broken glass.

On the docks across the bay,
A casket descends -
Comes to rest.

One tall ship slips across the bay -
Slicing open the glimmering green -
Sea-foam oozing an opening!

Horrors lie deep beneath this rippled sheen -
Terrors - forgotten murders,
As they fester in these murky waters -
Fear, distrust coils deep inside me.

Searing wounds etched deep inside my veins -
Tortures, twists my forbears forced to brave -
Stripped of home of grace of name -
Melted down poured in my frame,
These horrors though i never knew -
Sink downwards through the hidden years,
Now stir up to the surface.

This bright green cove's a glut of rotting wrecks -
So quiet beneath her silk pearlescent skin -
She gleams -
She shines back at the sun.

II. Transit

I cut out a piece of myself -
A laughing breathing piece of myself,
I nailed it to the Smoldering carcass of the city -
Amongst broken pipes,
Amongst spattered paint,
Upon shattered glass.
I grasped this piece of myself -
This crying, bleeding piece of myself -
I grasped between contorted fingers,
I smashed it into stone - Pinned up against the Crumbling ramparts of the city.

I buried it, concealed it -
This shivering fragment -
In a crag where you would stumble -
In a place you could not miss -
In a cruel red spotlight,
No place for children -
No room for children -
You have no softness -
No understanding -
No, no connection
To the soft dreams of children.

And high above -
I float on water -
On a homemade raft of pride -
Of truth, fanned by wonder,
Free from the noise -
From the grinding noise of the city.
But those long white plains of concrete Outstretched in the stink of the heat -
One blockhouse after another -
In every direction surround me,
Grey waves of cinder -
Seep heavy into my chest -
Suck out my breath -
Choke out my hope -
Blot out my light!

And so I cut out this piece of myself -
This gasping bleeding piece of myself,
I cast it down into the Causeways of the city,
Amongst broken pipes -
Amongst spattered paint -
Upon shattered glass.
So heed this bloody talis -
Nailed up against the asphalt sky,
In a crag where you would stumble -
In a place you could not miss -
In the cruel red spotlight -
Of the sun!
No place for children -
Strapped high above -
Up there it hangs -

Above the thundering chaos of the city.
Naked, breathless, alone.

III. Homecoming

Wet morning has kissed us -
Has lied about nearby oceans,
Has ferried ancient fragments -
Of christmases long forgotten,
Once red-robed -
Once cherished.

High stratus has scattered -
Has framed around this moment -
And as gaggles of cubicled workers -
Go prancing around the town square,
We slumber under covers - Dreaming of stones thrown into the harbour,
(First you then the babe.)

But long through the night -
As we slept, she has wandered -
This pale Southern ghost - floated slowly.
And restless she looms - so slowly beneath - Twisted oak, Spanish moss, down our street -
As we sleep.

Her outstretched hands -
And her upturned face -
All awash in the silver street-lights,
Her lustrous skin - an offering!
To some invisible being -
To some unknowable master -
Somewhere above the empty night,
Someone far, far above

Warm noontide licks our faces,
Returns us to our wooden chamber -
He's chased away thieving winter,

"I am made up of many men and women too from far and wide the centuries expanded and the decades decide whosoever shall be travelers and forge into the wilderness and who shall stay behind to cultivate the tenderness..."

- Matt the Electrician, from California to refugees everywhere - may you soon find home
