Tree of Life commemorates the victims of the shootings at Pittsburgh's Tree of Life Synagogue in 2018. This barbaric act was a morbid reminder of the horrific acts of last century, and our capacity to carry such hatred. Tree of Life speaks of both our goodness as humans as well as our penchant for horror, and leaves us with the difficult question, 'how can such hatred be defeated?' In search of text for such a work, my cousin came to mind, a Polish Jew who escaped a WWII Nazi Labor camp, and has written much on the subject. Together we shaped the following text:

Since the beginning of time,
we've shown our bright and darker sides.
And there were good and notable creations,
but also terrible horrors.

There were brave acts of kindness.
Always greatness, nobility and love,
but also suffering.

So much hatred!
Nienawidzic! (hatred)
So much poison!
Strach i zdrada! (fear and betrayal)

Where does such hatred come from?
How can such hatred be defeated?
Our prayers have gone unanswered,
our love is unrequited.

Since the beginning of time,
might there be love,
could there be love and understanding?
Until the end of time.

Much of my cousin Zenon Neumark's work goes toward acknowledging the many brave families who helped him escape horrific calamities in Europe. You can read about it in his best-selling memoir Hiding in the Open. It is with his spirit of working together, with all walks of society, that we come together to cast light upon this scourge of shootings that has befallen our United States. Our text points to the plight of Jewish people throughout history, but just as readily speaks for anyone who feels slighted, rejected or hated. We invite you to share in Zenon's story, as we bring love and healing to the suffering.
